Statement

Simon Lægsgaard Madsen has been a member of the ambassador team at the University of Southern Denmark since 1 September 2007.

The ambassador team travels to upper secondary schools and educational fairs to tell potential students what studying at the university is like.

An ambassador needs to have good verbal communication skills and an infectious commitment as well as a desire and the courage to both hold individual discussions and to give presentations for large audiences.

The ambassador must have specific knowledge of the general academic fields and be broadly informed about the university's many education programmes. Additionally, the members of the ambassador team should be able to tell of the University of Southern Denmark's study environment, as well as present a good and realistic picture of the university in a credible and sincere manner.

Simon has fully met our expectations and I therefore recommend him warmly.

Yours faithfully
